Eco- and health-conscious Valley moms Amy Brenneman, Erin Gray and Rachelle Carson Begley are just a few of the celebrities joining Whole Children, Whole Planet Expo producer Kathy Amos (pictured) for an unforgettable Earth Day Extravaganza. Amos' mission is to help educate the public about important environmental and health issues in a fun and engaging way.

Celebrate Earth Day's 40th Anniversary on April 24, 2010 at Highland Hall/Waldorf School while experiencing inspirational and life-changing art created this year. Whole Children, Whole Planet is working in partnership with CBS-2, KCAL-9, KOST 103.5FM, local magazines Valley Life, Valley Scene, LA Parent, and North Valley Community News, Whole Foods Market, Northridge East Neighborhood Council, Hugo's Restaurant and many others to present a free community event that is slated to be the largest Earth Day celebration in the greater Los Angeles area.

This eco-friendly, natural family event promises to be a day filled with nonstop education and entertainment for all ages. There will be exhibitors, prizes, organic food, free workshops, music, and more.

The free workshops will cover a wide range of hot topics, and attendees are encouraged to sign up in advance online at wcpexpo.com/schedule.html.

The Main Stage will feature entertainment throughout the day from a variety of known and not-so-known talented and amazing performers, and the Enrichment Village will offer hands-on activities that will engage, inspire and educate children and adults to explore their creative, curious minds and nurture their inner talents.

Producer Kathy Amos is asking the public to kick the plastic water bottle habit and bring their own reusable water bottle for a free water fill-up at the LifeSource Water station where there will be plenty of free clean drinking water.
